

Phonics, they not intend to sue the estate of the late architect. Her husband said Wednesday.

Mrs. Jahn, whose maiden name was Rosemary Gilroy, is in seclusion at her home. But her husband said that a report that she had asked San Francisco attorney to sue Piacentini's widow, Jacqueline, in "absolute certainty." Jahn said, however, that she had his wife's two children by Piacentini were barred from attending their father's funeral was "cruelty...difficult to comprehend."

Committee advised by the board, if it certainly they will be completed once acquiring the use of a computer.

The city controller has no such computer but a deal up with a computer at the University of California Berkeley would be set up directly in the same campus office.

Markowitz also pointed at the commissioner's lack of experience in the area of real estate and worried that they might "build a whole institution — one that would not address itself to all the situations that are met with in Berkeley."

Schools hiring policy unchanged

The Berkeley school board is not going to change its affirmative action hiring policy despite a last-ditch plea by board member Samuel Markowitz to do so.

Markowitz, whose term expires at the end of the month, failed in his attempt to replace existing policy with one which would simply read that hiring, promotion, transfer or dismissal of district employees be done without regard to race, religion, national origin or sex.

Only Markowitz voted in favor the motion Wednesday night while Louise Stoll, Marc Monheimer and Mary Jane Johnson voted "no." Rev. Hazaiah Williams, the fifth board member, was absent.

The effect of Markowitz' motion would be to no longer place emphasis on minority hiring to achieve a so-called "ethnic balance."

Markowitz felt the affirmative actions goals had been reached and indicated the need is no longer there.

The other three board members disagreed, claiming
